Description:

Fine example of this famous engraving of the Indians of Virginia making dugout canoes, from the first edition of De Bry's A brief and true report of the new found land of Virginia. which contained Thomas Hariot's text and John White's illustrations. De Bry's A brief and true report of the new found land of Virginia later became known as Part I of the famous Grand Voyages of America, whose illustrations were without question the most important and influential images of early American history right up to the present day, illuminating the life of the 16th Century Algonquin Indians as witnessed by White and Hariot. A fine example, in attractive wash colors.
