Description:

Uncommon original antique map showing the regions controlled by the eastern half of the Roman Empire as they stood in ancient times.

The map stretches from Italy eastwards to the Caspian and goes as far south as the Strait of Hormuz and Thebes. Tribes and the ancient names for all of the various regions are given. Cities are shown, as are mountain ranges and rivers. Parts where the Roman Empire had limited contact, mainly in the far northeast of this map, are little mapped.

To the right of the map is a flow chart of the various territorial divisions of the Roman Empire at this time.

This map was published by Nicholas Sanson in Paris in 1742.

Detailed Condition:

Original hand-color. Minor soiling. Lower corners trimmed.
