Nacogdoches by two women, María Tiburcia Ybarro and María Trinidad Ybarro, to John S. Roberts (here noted as "Juan S. Rover" and "Juan Es Rovert"). The two women had inherited the land from their late mother, María Beatrice Sanches Navarro, the widow of José Cayetano de Zepeda, a prominent early settler of Nacogdoches. This document brings together individuals of diverse backgrounds in an 1838 land transaction in the Texas borderlands: two women of Spanish or Mexican heritage sell land to an Anglo-American Texas pioneer, which transaction is attested by a notable European-born Texas official of Jewish heritage, Adolphus Sterne.

Nicholas Adolphus Sterne

Signed by Nicholas Adolphus Sterne (1801-1852) - here as Adolfo Sterne, Primer Regidor and substitute Alcalde of Nacogdoches. Sterne, born in Cologne to an Orthodox Jewish father and a Lutheran mother, was a significant Texas pioneer, financier of the Texas Revolution, and a friend of Sam Houston. He arrived in Nacogdoches in 1824 after a time in New Orleans, personally financed two companies of soldiers for the Texas Revolution, known as the New Orleans Grays, and eventually represented Nacogdoches in the Texas House of Representatives. He built a house on the eastern edge of Nacogdoches, near the confluence of the La Nana Bayou and Bonita Creek, where he often entertained Sam Houston and other prominent Texas residents. In 1839 Sterne commanded a company of militia in the Battle of the Neches, helping to expel the Cherokees from East Texas. By 1840 it is estimated from the census of that year that he owned about 16,000 acres of land, yet he often complained in his diary that he did not have enough "monay." He served as an interpreter as he knew many languages, including French, Spanish, German, Yiddish, Portuguese, and Latin.

The online Handbook of Texas has an extensive illustrated biography of Sterne, detailing his exploits and role in early Texas history.

The Fiscal Stamp of Coahuila and Texas

The present document includes two examples of papel sellado with the handsome ink stamped seal of the Treasury of the State of Coahuila y Tejas - a very early and rare example of an official seal from Texas. The papel sellado was almost certainly stamped or printed locally, in the state capital of Monclova. Unlike the regular state seal for Coahuila y Tejas, which was essentially a slightly modified version of the Mexican national seal, the fiscal or treasury seal of Coahuila y Tejas is a unique design: the Mexican eagle's breast is surmounted with a large Eye of Providence within a pyramidal sunburst or halo. Two figures on either side of the eagle are almost definitely Native Americans, one with a bow and another with a quiver of arrows.
