Description:

Fine two-sheet map of Ireland, published in 1665 by Nicolas Sanson, the leading French cartographer at the time. The maps are very detailed, including showing the many loughs and rivers of the island. Relief is shown pictorially.

The map is colored according to the historical provinces of Ireland, with Ulster colored in red, Connaught in yellow, Leinster in green, and Munster again in red. The upper map, showing the northern portion of Ireland, shows the country about as far south as Dublin, while the lower map shows the rest.
