Description:

Nice example of the rare second state of Jansson's map of the Pacific, which has been revised to include discoveries by Tasman and others in Australia and New Zealand.

As noted by Burden, this second state is rare, with the second state appearing in a copy of a Abraham Wolfgang atlas noted by Burden in the Library of Congress. Burden states that the primary changes to the map include the following:

The remainder of the Gulf of Carpentaria 's coastline is added to the west in Hollandia Nova. Tasman's discoveries in New Zealand and Tasmania are also now recorded. t' lant van Eso and Compagnies latn appear to the north of Japan.

The primary features of the first edition include a long chain of islands appear in the South Pacific, which are likely a vestige of Terra Australis and which are noted by Jansson to have been discovered by Hernando Gallego in 1576. Marvelous treatment of Australia, which is then only partially known.

While based upon the Briggs model, the lack of the 2nd Punta de la Concepcion suggests reliance upon Goos or his sources. The large Terra Incognita in the Northwest nearly connects Asia with the Island of California, separated only by the Fretum (Strait) Anian. Many place names in California. Nice treatment of the Ladrone and neighboring islands, along with the West Coast of America.

AMPR notes only one appearance of this map in a dealer catalogue in the past 30 years (Gowrie Galleries,
