Description:

Prophecies from The Matrix Institute

Fascinating prophecy map by Gordon-Michael Scallion, a figure known for his esoteric and apocalyptic visions.

Created in 1993, this map presents a speculative vision of the United States following a series of cataclysmic events. Scallion, a futurist, and spiritualist, employs a conventional relief map overlaid with dark blue to illustrate the dramatic inundation of vast regions, effectively juxtaposing a familiar geographic framework with his extraordinary predictions.

Scallion's map illustrates a sequence of disasters commencing with significant seismic activity in California, leading to widespread flooding that redefines the American landscape. His prophecies extend beyond geographical transformations, forecasting the emergence of a new societal structure consisting of 13 colonies, a profound demographic shift towards a youth-dominated population, and the rebirth of the mythical Atlantis. These elements are complemented by annotations that offer insights into his visionary process, revealing the map's origins in a series of personal revelations experienced in 1979 and its evolution through subsequent versions.

This map stands as a testament to the late 20th-century fascination with prophetic foresight and eschatological themes. Scallion's work, reflective of a period characterized by a mix of anxiety and speculative optimism about the future, invites contemplation on the nature of prediction, belief, and the human penchant for imagining the impact of transformative events on societal and geographic landscapes.
