Early Infographic Broadside

Interesting broadside chart, consisting of a compass rose at the center and ringed with information on the earth and the solar system.

The broadside was issued by A.G. Dusauzet, who seems to have been the original creator, publishing the broadside in 1725. The present example includes the imprint of John and Thomas Bowles, 1733.

Includes text boxes describing:

- Stars and Planets
- Air and Meteors
- The Sun and Moon
- The terms of Geography

[Early Infographic Chart] Geography Epitomiz'd. Of The Stars And Planets. Of The Sun And Moon. Of the Air and Meteors. The Terms of Geography Explain'd.

At the bottom is a set of five text boxes describing each of the continents, with capitals and geographical locations given, as well as principal rivers and islands.

Within the compass rose, there is an extensive discussion of the hemispheres, tropic lines, equator, equinoctial line, various zones and other geographical details.

Rarity

The broadside is very rare. It was first issued by A.G. Dusauzet in 1725 and re-issued by A.G. Dusauzet in 1727. The copperplate was likely acquired by John & Thomas Bowles in about 1731, with issues of 1731 and 1733 under the Bowles imprint.

OCLC locates 1 copy of the 1727 Dusauzet imprint (British Library) and no examples of the 1725.

OCLC locates 1 copy of the Bowles 1731 imprint (British Library). The Library of Virginia holds a copy of the Moll atlas with the 1733 Bowles imprint included. The description matches the Sothebys copy and the catalog entry notes that it was a gift from Alan Voorhees in September 2004, strongly suggesting that it is the 1984 Sothebys copy referenced above.
