Description:

Original Artwork for Lionel Morris's Antique Cars

Finely executed watercolor illustration of a 1907 Metallurgique Maybach, which was used for Lionel Harris's Antique Cars: The Story of the Automobile in Pictures, first published in about 1968.

The 1907 Metallurgique Maybach represents a pivotal moment in early automotive engineering, blending Belgian craftsmanship with German innovation. Automobiles Metallurgique, a Belgian company known for high-quality engineering, collaborated with Wilhelm Maybach, a German pioneer in automotive design, to create this remarkable vehicle. By 1907, both entities had already established strong reputations, with Metallurgique known for reliability and performance, and Maybach celebrated for his advanced engine designs.

This collaboration resulted in a vehicle equipped with a four-cylinder engine producing around 45 horsepower, a notable achievement for its time. The 1907 Metallurgique Maybach featured a four-speed gearbox and a top speed of approximately 75 miles per hour, demonstrating significant advancements in automotive technology. The robust chassis and elegant bodywork highlighted Metallurgique's meticulous craftsmanship, making the car both powerful and visually stunning.

Today, the 1907 Metallurgique Maybach is highly regarded among collectors and automotive historians, symbolizing the innovation and collaborative spirit of early 20th-century automotive engineering. Its rarity and historical significance make it a coveted piece, reflecting the early pursuit of excellence in vehicle
