Description:

Exceedingly rare map of America, the Pacific Ocean, Japan, New Guinea and the mythical Terra Australis, bearing the imprint of Jodocus Hondius (the elder) and dated 1589 and 1602. Includes a near continuous watercourse from the St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande, which flows into the Mar Vermeio (Gulf of California). Cibola is mentioned, as are Totonteac and a number of early California place names, extending to Quivira and Grandes corientes, north of C. de Mendocino. On the East Coast, Norumbega, Nova Francia, Canada, Port Royal, C. de S. Helena, La Florida and Sorrochoe appear, along with numerous Indian names in the interior. Notably absent is any sign of the discoveries shown in the maps of Le Moyne and White in the Southeastern US, which is one of the first of many clues leading to the conclusion that the map was quite likely first issued in 1589. The mythical islands of Brasil and S. Brendan appear, along with Frisland. Bermuda is also shown. The map is richly embellished with all sorts of ships and sea creatures. This separately published map has been the subject of much speculation regarding its history. As discussed by Burden, the great mystery is whether the map was engraved and published in 1589 during Hondius' stay in London or during his later residence in Amsterdam, for publication in 1602. While the map is dated 1589 in the cartouche, the only known state of the map bears the imprint I. Le Clerc excu. 1602. The map forms part of a set of four continents, but is the only one of the four to bear the date of 1589. The cartography of America significantly pre-dates 1602, with Hondius' own world maps of 1595 and his wall map of America of 1598 both include the discoveries of Drake and Cavendish, which are absent from this map. Burden further notes that the treatment of Japan and Greenland date to an earlier period, as does the beautifully sharp engraving style and embellishments. Similarly recent discoveries in Canada and the Straits of Magellan are omitted. In fact, Burden notes that the map bears a striking resemblance to Hondius' small world map of 1589. The map is full of other clues which would strongly suggest the earlier date. By contrast, the appearance of Port Royal on the map would make it the earliest appearance of this place name on a map, predating De Bry in 1591. It is also curious that no reference to Virginia appears, given the available knowledge in London in 1589 regarding the failed English Colony. If the map dates from 1589, Burden notes that it must be examined in the context of the maps of maps of the Pacific by Hogenberg, Mazza, and Ortelius, all published in the same time period. Burden notes similarities in the four maps, but observes that it is not possible to determine which would predate the other, based upon the information present. While the primacy issue and whether an earlier undiscovered 1589 edition may exist, the map's rarity is beyond question, with Burden noting that only a few examples are known. This example last changed hands in the mid 1950s, when its prior owner purchased the map from the Old Print Shop. Burden noted only 2 known examples in private US collections and no institutional examples. Minor repaired tear (outside printed image) and some minor soiling in the margins, including an old tape stain, but far from the printed image. Generally a fine dark impression of this extraordinary work.
