Description:

Detailed map covering the region from the New York City area and Long Island to the St. Lawrence River, including much of Northeastern part of Canada.

While the map is in the style of a sea chart with rhumb lines and delivers significant information concerning the coastal details of the regions covered, it also includes significant information in the interior parts of the map. Prepared at the beginning of the American Revolution, Sartine's maps, along with the maps of Georges Louis Le Rouge, were the primary sea charts and maps carried to America by the French military, under the command of Rochambeau, which was instrumental supporting the efforts of the American colonists to secure their independence from England.
