Description:

Nice example of Mathew Carey's map of the old Northwest.

The map reflects a very early appearance of Michigan Territory (organized 1805), which had not yet appeared separately on any map. The Upper Peninsula was still not part of the Territory. Similarly, the appearance of Illinois (organized in 1809) and Indiana (organized 1800), are among the earliest on a map. Illinois is pushed considerably west of its true location. Chicago is part of the NW Territory above Illinois, and noted as US Land, a vestige of its acquisition in the Treaty of Greenville. There are settlements along the Mississippi, but none in the interior of Illinois. Indiana includes some settlements, most notably the Fort Waynes and Ouatinon lands, again first acquired as part of the Treaty of Greenville. Ft. S. Clare is shown on Lake Huron, along with Detroit. Ohio is similarly sparsely populated. An important map of the region.

Carey published his American Atlas in 1795, which became the first folio atlas published in America. He
