Description:

Rare birdseye view of Pueblo, Colorado, published in 1874.

The view is drawn from the north-east, looking south-west and includes a key to mountains, public buildings and manufactories.

The view shows the town on the Arkansas River, with the Arkansas Valley Division of the Denver & Riro Grande Railroad in the distance and wrapping around on the left side into the foreground. A number of streets are named, with many buildings shown and a more organized grid pattern townsite in the distance, along with a Reservoir and Irrigation Ditch.

Features a vignette of the Courthouse at lower left, Chilcott Residence at lower right. Outstanding depiction of the buildings in the city, many identified by number, along with trees, ditches, railroad routes, and other important geographic features.

OCLC locates only 3 known examples (Colorado Historical Society, Colorado Special Library and Denver Public Library).

Detailed Condition:

Trimmed to neatline, with margins added.
