Britain." Moll notes that this the first map to include "the Royall Borroughs of North Britain," some of which are not found on any other maps. A number of "New Forts" are shown (Bernera, Kilwhnimen, Ruthsun of Badenoch and Innersnail).

A note below the title cartouche indicates that all towns and boroughs in Great Britain that have the right to choose a member of Parliament are marked with one or two stars, according to the number of members elected. The note also shows the changes affected by the Union Act of 1707 (the number of Parliament changed to 558 members).

Moll became acquainted with a number of British explorers, scientists, writers and publishers while frequenting Jonathan's Coffee House in Change Alley, London. Dennis Reinhartz explains that Moll drank coffee with the Knapton's publishers of voyage accounts, including Dampier's, Dampier's fellow privateer Woodes Rogers, the scientist Robert Hooke, the botanist John Martin, and writers Jonathan Swift, and Daniel Defoe.

Born ca. 1654 in Bremen, Moll moved to England and engraved for Moses Pitt, Sir Jonas Moore, Grenville Collins, John Adair, and the Seller & Price firm. He published his first original maps in the early 1680s and had set up his own shop by the 1690s. Over the course of his career he published dozens of geographies, atlases and histories, not to mention numerous sheet maps. His most famous works are Atlas Geographus, a monthly magazine that ran from 1708 to 1717, and The World Described (1715-54). He also frequently made maps for books, including those of Dampier's publications and Swift's Gulliver's Travels.
