Description:

A Fascinating Mid-18th Century Artifact

Detailed regional map of France, centered on Paris. Extends to Fontainebleau, Montreuil, Etampes, Meaux, etc. Highly detailed, with decorative cartouche.

On the verso of the map are two different manuscript items:

Tableau De la Population des Paroisses de Paris

The full title of this table is below. It appears to show the population of the 42 named Paris Parishes, comparing the populations in between 1750 and 1759 with the period between 1768 and 1777.

The table appears to be used using a method approved by Jean Baptiste Marduel, the Cure (Abbe) of the Church of Saint Roch, located at 284 rue Saint-Honoré, in the 1st arrondissement, built between 1653 and 1740.

Tableau De la Population des Paroisses de Paris, estimee d'apress le nombre des Baptemeese d'une annee commune sur dix. Suivant le caleul de quelques personnes, le nombres des Baptemes est a celui des habitans deans la proportion d'une a quarante, selon d'autres dans d'un a 36 seulement. quelque Caleul qu'un veuille suivre Tableau fait connoitre la Difference de Population entre les deux Epoques indiquees. Cette estimation qui approche les plus de son objet suivant l'opinion de Mr. Mardeul cure de St. Roch qui en est l'auteur et quis mela donee en fevrier 1780. Doit selon lui setre preferablement fait sur le pied de 36 homes pour un enfant.

Environs De Paris . . . 1753 (With Population Table for Paris and Treaty of Peace of Versailles in Manuscript on the verso)

Treaty of Peace at Versailles February Signed February 10, 1763

This is a reference to the Treaty of Paris of 1763, signed February 10, 1763, which ended the French and Indian War/Seven Years' War between Great Britain and France, as well as their respective allies. In the terms of the treaty, France gave up all its territories in mainland North America, effectively ending any foreign military threat to the British colonies in America.

The manuscript would seem to be a recitation of the Treaty in French.
