Description:

Rare English sea chart of the Gold Coast, published by Samuel Thornton.

The chart includes 2 sections of the West African Coastline, along the Cape Coast of Ghana.

A number of Western settlements are noted, including:

- Dutch Factory at Fort St. Jago
- Fort Nassau
- Fort Maure
- English Factory at Cormantaine (Fort Amsterdam)

Fort St. Jago: Fort Coenraadsburg or Conraadsburg, also Fort São Tiago da Mina, is a fort on the Dutch Gold Coast, built in 1652 to protect Fort Elmina from attacks. It was built on the site of a fortified chapel that the Portuguese had built and that the Dutch had burned to the ground in the Battle of Elmina (1637).

Fort Nassau: In 1612, Clantius built a reinforced fort at Mouri, which, due to the unfamiliarity of the Dutch with building in the tropics, was notorious for its unhealthy conditions. In 1624, the Dutch considerably expanded the fort. Fort Nassau served as the capital of the Dutch Gold Coast from its establishment until 1637, when the Dutch captured Fort Elmina from the Portuguese.

Fort Amsterdam is a fort in Kormantin, Central region, Ghana. It was built by the English between 1638 and 1645 as Fort Cormantin or Fort Courmantyne, and was captured by admiral Engel de Ruyter of the
