Description:

An intricately detailed map of Hungary by Jacob von Sandrart, this 1664 publication features a wealth of geographical and historical information, including battles against the Ottoman Empire and a hidden chronogram.

Jacob von Sandrart's Neue Land-Tafel von Hungarn und dessen incorporirten Königreichen und Provinzen: auß den besten Mappen verfertigt und gebessert is a testament to the cartographic skill and artistry of its time. Published in Nuremberg, this map captures Hungary during the 17th century, when the region was experiencing significant conflict and change due to ongoing battles with the Ottoman Empire. The historical annotations included on the map offer valuable insight into the events that shaped Hungary's development and trajectory during this period.

In addition to its geographical and historical accuracy, the map is also remarkable for its hidden chronogram, which reveals the map's date within the text. The chronogram "Gott ste Vre DeM b LVtg Ir Igen Türken Ant I Chr Ist" conceals the date 1664, adding another layer of intrigue to this already fascinating piece. The presence of a chronogram is a relatively rare feature in cartography and demonstrates the ingenuity of the mapmaker.

The Neue Land-Tafel von Hungarn is believed to have appeared in Louis Vlasblom's Universum Totale, Sive Rerum Visibilium Compendium, further solidifying its status as an important work of cartography. Rich in detail and historical context, this map offers a captivating snapshot of Hungary in the 17th century, making it an exceptional artifact for those interested in the interplay of geography, history, and
