Description:

Finely colored example of the Coats of Arms of Frederick IV, Elector Palatine, from a late edition of De Bry's Voyages.

This intricately designed coat of arms shows a lion standing atop a medieval suit of armor, with three heraldic symbols below. This is flanked by two majestic lions, and the whole is set in a majestic neoclassical setting. Text above and below the image describes the greatness of Frederick IV.

(The Coat of Arms of Frederick the Fourth) Dem Durchlechtigsten Hochgeborenen
Fursten und Herrn/herrn Friderichen dem Vierdten . . . [The Most High-Born Prince Frederick the Fourth]

Frederick IV was also known as Frederick the Religious. He inherited the title Elector Palatine and was an ardent Calvinist. He continued anti-Catholic measures and served as head of the Protestant League. However, his ardent religiousness hid his alcoholism, which led to his retirement from state matters.
