Description:

Fine old color example of this composite map of 3 important Canadian Cities, published at the outset of the Seven Years War (French & Indian War).

At the start of the war, these three cities were the most strategically important cities in British Canada. Halifax, founded in 1749 by the British, was the primary English stronghold in the region.

Louisbourg and Quebec were the primary French strongholds, Louisbourg being the center of the fishing trade and primary location of the French forces defending the entrance to the St. Lawrence River, which would be seized by the British in 1758.
