Description:

An interesting manuscript map of High Island, Texas, one of the first big oil strikes after Spindletop. Showing drilling blocks in the process of being developed.

The map includes notes about a spring and "foot ridge" (?)

The map offers an opportunity to explore the relationship between early drilling leases, land ownership, and geology.

Detailed Condition:

Manuscript map in pen (in two or more hands) on wove paper. Moderate surface soiling throughout. A couple of edge tears and some edge wear.
