Description:

An Early Color Photographic View of UC Berkeley and the Bay Area.

Attractive photochrome view of Berkeley, California, taken by one of the West's greatest photographers, William Henry Jackson.

In the immediate foreground, the first buildings of the University of California, Berkeley campus can be seen. The most readily recognizable buildings on the campus are the cylindrical Bacon Library and North and South Halls just beyond it.

Oakland can be seen to the south, with its large railway piers stretching far out into San Francisco Bay.

In the distance, San Francisco, Alcatraz, Angel Island, and Marin are all visible.

This view was repurposed in a smaller format as a postcard for the UC Berkeley campus.
