Description:

Antique engraved map of one of the unfulfilled plans for rebuilding London in the aftermath of the infamous Great Fire of 1666.

This is Sir John Evelyn's plan, which, while not as well known as Sir Christopher Wren's, was an important entry in urban planning. Its use of rectilinear avenues combining into large public squares borrowed from Continental traditions, while advancing a kind of modernity over the pre-existing Medieval layout.

The map includes a key of 38 landmarks.

Detailed Condition:

Some foxing.
