Description:

Very intriguing original antique map of Greece and the Peloponnese as it stood during the classical period. Regions are subdivided according to these former divisions, with "Attica," "Achaia," and "Thessalia" being some of the geographical names used. This example of the map is particularly interesting because a printed subdivision of the regions of ancient Greece are affixed, extending down to five levels of regional subdivision.

This map was published by Nicolas Sanson in 1703 in Paris and republished here in a 1705 edition.

Detailed Condition:

Original hand-color in outline. Couple of wormholes around the centerfold. Additional engraved toponymic sheet onlaid to the left margin.
