Description:

Fascinating printed and manuscript map of the famed Paris Exposition of 1900 showing the method by which electricity was distributed around the fairgrounds.

The legend below the map lists a variety of providers of either the equipment or electricity itself. There are also symbols for boxes to invert and interrupt circuits.

A wonderful ephemeral bit of information about one of the great events of the outset of the 20th century.

Detailed Condition:

Contemporary photographic transfer, dissected in ten sections and backed on contemporary linen. With extensive manuscript amendments in black and red ink.
