Description:

This fascinating Russian-language map, titled "Области распространения сумчатых, жвачных и неполно зубых животных," showcases the distribution areas of marsupials, ruminants, and toothless animals around the world. Published in Leipzig by Friedrich Arnold Brockhaus around 1890, the map is written in Russian, which is unusual for maps of this topic and time period.

The main focus of the map is the geographical distribution of different animal groups, specifically marsupials, ruminants, and toothless animals. The map features detailed illustrations and labels for each region, highlighting the habitats and countries where these animals could be found during the late 19th century.

This map offers a captivating insight into the global distribution of various animal groups, and it serves as a valuable historical resource for understanding the biodiversity and biogeography of the animal kingdom at that time.
