Description:

This map of Brooklyn was published by Rand McNally in 1917. The map includes detailed information on the various transportation options available in the region, including subways, elevated railroads, surface lines, ferries, and tunnels. The map also includes information on which transportation options are under construction at the time of its publication.

One of the more interesting aspects of the map is its detailed documentation of proposed changes to the hydrography of Jamaica Bay. Many proposed shipping channels and areas of infill are outlined.

Overall, the map offers a valuable historical record of the transportation options available in Brooklyn at the time of its publication.
