Description:

Finely detailed map of Upper Silesia, published by Jean Beaurain, geographer to the King of France.

The map illustrates the various principalities, duchies, and seigneuries that comprised the upper part of the Duchy of Silesia. Each of the duchies and seigneuries on the map was significant in its own right, and their identification is crucial to understanding the historical context of the region.

The first duchy referenced on the map is Oppeln, which was situated in the western part of the Duchy of Silesia. Oppeln was a significant duchy and was known for its impressive fortifications, including a large castle that served as the residence for the dukes of Oppeln.

The second duchy mentioned is Ratibor, which was located in the northern part of Silesia. Ratibor was known for its beautiful architecture, including a stunning castle that was the residence of the dukes of Ratibor.

The third duchy is Iagerndorf, which was situated in the eastern part of the Duchy of Silesia. Iagerndorf was known for its beautiful castle, which was built in the Renaissance style and served as the residence of the dukes of Iagerndorf.
