Description:

This remarkable east-oriented sea chart, titled "The North Sea Compiled from the Most Recent Surveys," showcases a detailed representation of the North Sea during the mid-19th century. Published in London by Jas Imray & Son at 89 & 102 Minories in 1859, the chart is derived from the latest available surveys of the time, ensuring accuracy and up-to-date information for navigators.

The chart features several insets, including Heligoland, Sands off Hasborough (1828 - 55), Bridlington Bay (1842-50), Farn Islands (1856), Fiord of Christiansand, Arendal Inlet (1843), and Approaches to Bergen (1842-1849). These insets provide a more detailed view of significant locations and navigational challenges around the North Sea, aiding mariners in traversing its waters safely.

With its blend of precise cartographic details and beautifully rendered coastlines, this 1859 sea chart of the North Sea serves as an invaluable resource for understanding the region's maritime geography during this historical period.
