Description:

A rare Czech language edition of Heinrich Bunting's imaginative and stylized plan of the walled City of Jerusalem, featuring key elements such as King David and Solomon's temples, olive trees, and more. This woodcut, published in Prague in 1592, showcases a creative interpretation of the Holy City's landscape.

This artistic rendition of Jerusalem reflects the significance of the city in the religious imagination of the late 16th century. The map highlights important historical and biblical landmarks, such as the temples of King David and Solomon, emphasizing their centrality to the city's religious heritage. The inclusion of olive trees, which hold both symbolic and historical importance in the context of Jerusalem, further demonstrates the mapmaker's desire to capture the essence of the Holy City.

The "Konterfekt Swatého Města Geruzaléma" is a testament to the cartographic creativity of its time, as well as the enduring fascination with Jerusalem as a focal point of religious history. The stylized representation not only offers a visually compelling perspective on the city but also provides valuable insights into the way it was perceived and understood by Europeans during the late 16th century.
