Description:

A captivating 1974 pictorial bird's-eye view of Washington, D.C., facing south and offering a unique perspective on the White House, U.S. Capitol, and the Potomac, designed by Penthouse Studios and published by Trans Continental Cartographers Ltd.

This vintage view of Washington, D.C., titled "Washington The Nation's Capital," provides a fascinating glimpse into the city's urban landscape during the 1970s. As a multifaceted piece, it not only showcases the architectural and historical landmarks of the nation's capital, but also serves as an advertisement for various businesses, including the House & Home Real Estate Corp. The vibrant colors and detailed illustrations capture the essence of the city, making it a visually engaging piece for those interested in the history and development of Washington, D.C.

Trans Continental Cartographers Ltd., a Canadian company based in Vancouver, British Columbia, printed the map, reflecting the international interest in the American capital and its iconic landmarks. The design by Penthouse Studios, a renowned design firm, demonstrates their expertise in creating visually appealing and informative illustrations, combining artistic elements with geographical information.
