Description:

Herman Moll's Turkey in Asia or Asia Minor &c. Agreeable to Modern History encapsulates the historical geography of this richly diverse region.

The map's primary focus is on place names, islands, mountains, rivers, cities, and other notable features, providing a comprehensive representation of Turkey in Asia, or Asia Minor as it was known historically. Moll's meticulous attention to detail is evident in the carefully annotated landmarks and geographical features that punctuate the map.

Various place names are recorded in their historical context, offering viewers a window into the region's multifaceted history and culture. The islands of this region, notable for their strategic importance and cultural significance, are carefully delineated, serving as waypoints in this marine landscape.

Mountains, the natural barriers and ecological marvels, are portrayed with great detail, attesting to Moll's commitment to geographical accuracy. Rivers, the veins of the landscape, snake their way across the terrain, acting as important conduits of trade and communication.

Cities, the hubs of human activity and cultural exchanges, are represented meticulously. Notable metropolises and lesser-known locales are marked, providing a glimpse into the urban tapestry of Asia Minor during the period the map represents.
