Description:

The 1750 map titled "La Judee ou Terre Sainte divisee en ses Douze Tribus," published in Paris, offers a comprehensive look at the Holy Land, or Judea, and its historical divisions based on the 12 Tribes of Israel. With its clear demarcations and detailed depiction, this map is a notable example of 18th-century cartography focused on biblical regions.

At the map's core is its division of the Holy Land into regions controlled by the 12 Tribes of Israel. The territories are distinctly outlined, allowing for a straightforward understanding of their geographical relation to one another. This layout provides valuable context for those studying biblical history or seeking an understanding of the ancient territorial divisions of the region.

An inset on the upper left side of the map depicts the journey of the Children of Abraham as they sought Canaan, the Promised Land. This feature offers a summarized route of this significant journey, providing context to one of the important narratives of the Old Testament.

The map's cartouche is both informative and decorative. Centered on it are the two tablets representing the law given to Moses. Accompanying the tablets are various symbols related to the Old Testament, adding an element of visual interest and providing additional context to the region's religious significance.
