Description:

Alain Manesson Mallet's Arabie Moderne, a remarkable miniature map first published in Paris in 1683, provides a fascinating representation of the Arabian Peninsula, the Red Sea, and surrounding areas. Originating from Mallet's prolific Description de l' Univers, this map exhibits the breadth and depth of 17th-century cartography.

Situated in the 17th-century, the map falls within the early modern period of history, a time when European exploratory voyages were expanding knowledge of the world. The Arabian Peninsula, with its rich history and strategic location between Europe, Asia, and Africa, was a subject of intense interest and exploration.

Arabie Moderne

Mallet's Arabie Moderne is a testament to the work that underlies 17th-century cartography. Featured in the ambitious project, Description de l' Univers, the map is a compelling depiction of the Arabian Peninsula and its environs. The map not only depicts the region's geographical intricacies but also underscores the extensive understanding and comprehensive worldview of its time.
