Description:

Uplandia, an exceptional map published by the renowned Dutch cartographer Jan Jansson around 1650, displays an impressive representation of Stockholm and its surrounding areas. Jansson brilliantly captures the intricate geography of the region, showcasing the jagged coastline and nearby mountains surrounding the Swedish capital.

An exquisite feature of this map is the beautifully ornate title cartouche that significantly enhances its visual appeal. The maritime ambiance is reinforced with artful depictions of galleons, embodying the naval importance of the region during that era. Furthermore, the map presents a detailed mileage scale placed beneath the regional Upland coat of arms, an emblem of great significance in the area.

Jansson's Uplandia embodies the meticulous skill of its creator and offers a detailed window into the geography of Stockholm and its environs during the mid-17th century. It stands as an intriguing blend of geographical information and artistic flair.
