Description:

A New Map of Turkey In Europe, Divided into its Provinces is a detailed antique map published by John Cary in London in 1801. This map provides a comprehensive view of "Turkey in Europe", including Greece, Bosnia, Dalmatia, Serbia, Bulgaria, Moldova, Romania, and Albania, as well as the surrounding islands such as Cyprus and Crete.

Hand-colored by countries, this map offers clear distinctions between the various regions and provinces within the Ottoman Empire. The use of colors enhances the visual clarity of the boundaries and facilitates a better understanding of the political divisions in the area during the early 19th century.

Considered one of the best large-format English atlas maps of its time, Cary's map exemplifies the cartographic excellence of the period. The level of detail and precision displayed in this map reflects the dedication and skill of John Cary, a prominent mapmaker of the era. Its inclusion in an atlas signifies its importance as a reliable and authoritative source of geographical information.

A New Map of Turkey In Europe, Divided into its Provinces is a valuable resource for historians, geographers, and enthusiasts interested in the political and geographic landscape of the region during the early 19th century. Its detail and clear presentation make it a valuable tool for understanding the territorial divisions and boundaries of the time.
