Description:

Published by Edward Stanford in London on August 21st, 1861, Stanford's Map of the Seat of War in America. Sheet I. is a beautiful hand-colored lithographed folding map of the Mid-Atlantic States. With its subject matter focused on the early stages of the American Civil War, this map serves as a valuable primary source from a tumultuous period in United States history.

In the larger context of the war, the map provides a European perspective on the conflict, illustrating the areas of intense military engagements. The map, dissected and mounted on linen, is preserved in its original case, attesting to the quality of its construction and the care taken in its preservation.

A series of cities between Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and Richmond, Virginia, including the prominent site of Gettysburg, are underlined in red. This highlights these locations' significance as key strategic points during the war, marking the trajectories of army movements and potential battlegrounds.

Perhaps most notably, the map's creation date places it during the first year of the Civil War, providing a snapshot of the conflict's early phase. This temporal positioning allows viewers to trace the progression of
