Description:

Denmark, published by William Lizars in Edinburgh circa 1830, offers a comprehensive mapping of that nation during an era of European transition. With outline hand-coloring by province, the map showcases the roads, forests, and significant cities that punctuated Denmark's landscape at the time.

The early 19th century was a time of considerable change and evolution for Europe, with nations redefining their borders and power dynamics, especially following the Napoleonic Wars. Denmark, being a significant maritime nation with strategic importance in Northern Europe, played a pivotal role in these developments.
