Description:

Nieuwe Kaart van de Sundasche Eilanden als Borneo, Sumatra en Groot Java &c., published in Amsterdam by Isaak Tirion, presents a detailed representation of the Sunda Islands, including Borneo, Sumatra, and Java during the 18th century. The map accurately delineates coastlines, islands, and waterways, reflecting the geographical understanding of the archipelago at that time.

The 18th century was a time when European powers expanded their influence in Southeast Asia. The Dutch and the British, among others, showed a growing interest in the region. The Sunda Islands, situated between the Indian and Pacific Oceans, were central to trade and navigation routes, drawing attention from these colonial powers.

In its portrayal of topographical details and political boundaries, Nieuwe Kaart van de Sundasche Eilanden als Borneo, Sumatra en Groot Java &c. serves as an appealing document of the Sunda Islands in the 18th century, highlighting their relevance in trade and colonial undertakings.

Singapore is labeled "Sincapoera" on the map.
